Has immigration ruined
Britain's national identity?

THREE major towns and cities have seen their white British population fall to a minority, mirroring that of London. And other population centres are set to follow.

The white British proportion is officially below 50 per cent in Leicester, Luton and Slough.

London's 3.7 million white Britons were already a minority – 44.9 per cent of the population – and researchers said the same could be true in Birmingham within seven years.

The researchers at Manchester University attribute the shifting balance to the wave of eastern European migration fostered by the previous Labour government.
