A being from the etheric world came and asked various inhabitants of the physical plane about the "after" life.

The responses were reported as follows:

The baby said: "After I've grow up, I will become me."

The child said: "After puberty, I will become me."

The teenager said: "After my schooling, I will become me."

The student said: "After university, I will become me."

The young man said: "After I've left home, I will become me."

The ambitious man said: "After I have a career, and am successful, I will become me."

The lover said: "After loved and married, I will become me."

The young couple said: "After we've created a home, we will become us."

The young parents said: "After we've children, we will become us."

The middle-aged man said: "After I am financially independent, I will become me."

The middle-aged couple said: "After the children have left home, we will become us."

The senior couple said: "After we've grandchildren, we will become us."

The senior man said: "After I have retired, I will become me."

The aged man said: "After I die, I will reincarnate, and be me, and get it right next time!"

The being from the etheric world concluded that mankind would never become "me".
